

Japan ranked first in Asia for study abroad!

Student Survey Responses and Global Trends Combine to Create the Top Ten Ranking

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN (January 28, 2020) - Japan was ranked first in Asia and 17th in the world for students who want to study abroad in a ranking recently released by higher education search portal, educations.com.

For the second year in a row, educations.com used student survey responses to highlight key factors in the international student's journey. Over 30,000 students revealed that their priority when selecting a university is its location. Other priorities like cultural experiences, high quality teaching, and language learning provided a framework for ranking the countries based on publicly-available data. Japan scored first in Asia overall, and also ranked first for students who want to have an adventure and access quality teaching. According to the report, "If you're looking to study in an urban, thriving, and technologically advanced place that has thousands of years of history, tradition, and culture, Japan will deliver!"

In a statement, CIO of educations.com, Fredrik Högemark, said, "Studying abroad is an important life goal for many, and this year's survey revealed that students are prioritizing their personal development, including language-learning and career advancement, even more than last year. The countries in our Top 10 are outstanding examples of places where students can achieve their personal, academic, and professional goals."
